Homily Helps

† Scripture passages to note:

1 Corinthians: Brothers and sisters: If I preach the gospel, this is no reason for me to boast, for an obligation has been imposed on me, and woe to me if I do not preach it!

Mark 1: They brought to him (Jesus) all who were ill or possessed by demons. The whole town was gathered at the door. He cured many who were sick with various diseases, and he drove out many demons.

† Comment for the day:

St. Paul reminds us that it is incumbent upon all of those who are baptized to preach the gospel. It is not optional, but rather an essential requirement. It's non-negotiable. "Woe to me if I don't preach the gospel," he writes. Many Christians tend to misunderstand that preaching the gospel is something reserved to ordained clergy, religious, and catechists. Therefore, it is important to revisit the teachings from the World Synod of Catholic Bishops in 1971: "Action on behalf of justice and participation in the transformation of the world fully appear to us as a constitutive dimension of the preaching of the gospel, or, in other words, of the church's mission for the redemption of the human race and its liberation from every oppressive situation."

To preach the gospel, it is not enough to repeat the foundational truths as contained in ancient creedal statements. These truths and their implications have to be contextualized. In our contemporary context, this means that we must reflect on the social and environmental crises in the light of our faith. We must also allow the gospel to inform our search for solutions and to shape the strategies we adopt once we discern what the gospel demands.

Just as Jesus reached out to those who were ill or possessed by demons, the church today must follow in his footsteps and seek to heal, not just individuals, but also our society. Contemporary American society is convulsed by racism and disparity between rich and poor. It has abandoned its responsibility to care for and protect our environment, and has sought to relegate religion to activity that is intrapersonal, without reference to the public square. The ideologies of hyper-consumerism, hands-off laissez-faire capitalism, and "liberty" (even at the expense of the common good) are just a few examples of what the ancient authors of sacred scripture would brand as demons. A homilist should consider sharing with his faith community an example or two of how the local church expresses its lived tradition of preaching the gospel in relation to a range of issues such as immigration, nuclear disarmament, and climate justice.

† Passages from Laudato Si' to note:

We are faced not with two separate crises, one environmental and the other social, but rather with one complex crisis, which is both social and environmental. Strategies for a solution demand an integrated approach to combating poverty, restoring dignity to the excluded, and at the same time protecting nature. (#139)

Doomsday predictions can no longer be met with irony or disdain. We may well be leaving to coming generations debris, desolation and filth. The pace of consumption, waste and environmental change has so stretched the planet's capacity that our contemporary lifestyle, unsustainable as it is, can only precipitate catastrophes, such as those which even now periodically occur in different areas of the world. The effects of the present imbalance can only be reduced by our decisive action, here and now. We need to reflect on our accountability before those who will have to endure the dire consequences. (#161)

Related Prayers of the Faithful

Option 1: For Pope Francis and the entire Catholic community, as we preach the gospel and call for respect for human life, racial justice, non-violence, and inclusion of all the marginalized in our society, let us pray to the Lord....

Option 2: That as followers of Jesus, we may have courage to preach the gospel and commit ourselves to safeguarding "our common home" and helping to overcome every form of exploitation and oppression, let us pray to the Lord...
